ABOUT ICS-2026

ICS-2026 aims to address emerging challenges in intelligent control by emphasizing engineering solutions that extend beyond purely digital and simulation-based environments. With the growing demand for reliable, adaptive, and autonomous engineering systems, there is a clear need to connect strong theoretical foundations with approaches that support practical deployment and experimentation.

The workshop focuses on modern control methodologies integrated with intelligence, learning, and optimization techniques, highlighting their role in system modeling, analysis, and control design. The workshop moves seamlessly from theoretical ideas to hands-on implementation, demonstrating how intelligent control concepts translate into working engineering solutions capable of handling uncertainty, nonlinearity, and performance constraints.

Through expert lectures and focused technical sessions, the workshop provides in-depth insights into the design and deployment of intelligent control systems. The event brings together researchers, academicians, industry professionals, and students to explore advanced intelligent control methodologies and to foster interdisciplinary interaction toward deployable, experimentally grounded engineering solutions.

TOPICS TO BE COVERED

- Foundations of Intelligent Control Systems
- Data-Driven Control: From Primary Data to Stabilization
